

Digital Divide Program

Who it benefits?

Low-to Moderate-Income families with middle or high school aged children within Longmont city limits.

What does it provide?

Families will receive free access to wireless internet services and the equipment to receive it. Some families may also qualify for a free computer through a partnership with the Jared Polis Foundation.

How can I apply?

Contact Longmont Children, Youth and Families and fill out an application.

As part of the installation of a citywide wireless internet, the City of Longmont received free wireless internet accounts to help bridge the digital divide for families who cannot afford to purchase this service. These accounts are being offered to low-and moderate-income families in Longmont with children in middle school or high school within Longmont city limits. Families will also receive help to purchase the equipment to receive the wireless service. There may also be help available for qualified families to receive a laptop through a partnership with the Jared Polis

For more information please contact:

LONGMONT
CHILDREN, YOUTH
& FAMILIES

A Division of Community Services

1050 Lashley Street
Longmont, Co 80504
303-651-8580

www.longmontcolorado.gov

What is the Digital Divide?

The Digital Divide is the inequality in access to information technology, including computers, Internet and other digital equipment.